Engineering Course Named in World Top Four. Charles Sturt Uni

They don't sit a single exam throughout their degree and instead of lectures, engineering students at Charles Sturt University have Netflix-style on-demand classes. The students spend four years of their five-and-a-half-year degree doing paid engineering work and are assessed on portfolios of their real-world projects. The unusual approach has attracted the attention of the leading Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which has named the regional NSW university as one of the four top "emerging leaders in engineering" in the world.
